The best thing would be not to cut but try removing the wires and repair the original wires on the car. Usually when there is an alarm system installed they have a shut off switch. Which will put the car back in it`s original way but the switch is usually mounted away from where it can be seen. Also I found a site where if you just google chapman remote systems they have a tech that answers ...

Vehicle thieves embody the definition of lazy. The more difficult it is for the thief to steal your vehicle, the less likely it will be stolen. The problem with difficulty is that once a security system has been on the market, the professional thief learns how to defeat that system rendering it less effective.
