December 2014. 272pp. In 1854 four of the major powers in Europe, Britain, France, Turkey and Russia became embroiled in a devastating and costly war. While hostilities began in Turkey's territories on the Danube, the war soon shifted to the Crimean peninsula, which was then part of the Russian Empire. The focus of the allied war effort became the strategically important naval port of Sevastopol in the Crimea.

Ireland and the Crimean War. The event which eventually caused the outbreak of the war was somewhat bizarre. During the summer of 1850 Orthodox and Roman Catholic monks clashed in Bethlehem over the question of who should control the church of the Nativity. These clashes resulted in the death of several Orthodox monks," writes David Murphy in Ireland & The Crimean War.

Ireland and the Crimean War - Irish Identity

Irish involvement in the Crimea was not, of course, confined to the Light Brigade's charge, which had no effect on the War. In his excellent work, Ireland and the Crimean War, the historian David Murphy reckons that of 111,000 men who fought in Britain's Crimean army, over 37,000, or one-third, were Irish, of whom some 7,000 were killed. About 4,000 more Irishmen served there in the British navy.

The Crimean War and Irish Society - Paul Huddie - Google Books

Paul Huddie's new book The Crimean War and Irish Society looks at one long overlooked aspect of nineteenth century Irish history, the Crimean War and Ireland. In doing so, he not only shows that just as in England, Irish people were heavily engaged in the events of 1853-1856; but that the Crimean War also helped to shape future events in Ireland.
