The Sword And Pen Poems

The pen is mightier than the sword, We have heard the poets say; The major changes man has wrought Seem to go the other way. Long years ago, with noble words, We declared our country free; The power of the sword is how Our freedom came to be. Try to remember Gettysburg, Iwo Jima, or Bataan; The answers for those did not come From a wordy magic wand.

British War Poets: By the Pen and the Sword. With the October issue of The Rake celebrating British military heroes now on the stands, we raise a sombre toast to the literary heroes produced by the horrors of World War I. Gathered by the side of a muddy track, British soldiers look on as a fellow comrade takes pen to paper in a brief moment of calm.
